

Is the Lisbon Treaty Invalid in Ireland

The Good Friday Agreement and a Quantum Temporal Singularity in the Irish Constitution

Brian G. Mc Enery

briangmcenery

Fri. 27 Sept. 2013

There is a big problem with the state of the Constitution of Ireland between 2002 and 2007. According to the referendum conducted in the Republic of Ireland on the 28 May 1998, the Irish Government were empowered to remove Articles 2 and 3 of the constitution and replace them with new versions, as agreed in the Good Friday Agreement. What is it about Good Friday in Ireland. It was the day the Easter Rising started, also it was the day that Ireland was last successfully defended from invasion, as the battle of Clontarf took place on Good Friday in 1014. It was the day that one of my progenitors was killed, as on my mother's side I am a direct descendent of Bríon Borraimhe, Brian Ború. There is also a peice of knowledge of a pre-christian Irish saint receiving knowledge on the original day.

Any way back to the constitution. A constitution is a very special document, the wikipedia entry gives a very good outline. Basically it starts with the preamble, which mentions God, then moves on to Articles 1, 2, 3, which essentially define the nation, and the national territory, and then moves on to establish the state, the President, and so on. However during the period from approximately 2002 to 2007, when the Good Friday agreement was suspended what state were Articles 2 and 3 in. I say that they were in a state of a Quantum Temporal Singularity, they were winking in and out of existence, much like virtual particles emerging and submerging out from and in to the quantum foam. So what does this have to do with the Lisbon Treaty. The Lisbon Treaty was signed on the 13 December 2007. But by whom. Was the government that was in power at the time a legal entity. I am of the opinion, no, because like Articles 2, and 3, the particular Articles which give rise to the Irish Government, Article 28, was also winking in and out of existence. So in fact there was no stable government in Ireland. We all know that now. The Lisbon treaty negotiators were winking in and out of existence, they had no validity. This causes a huge problem for the EU, as it can be argued that the Irish peoples rejection of the first referendum was valid, but not respected by the powers that be. The Irish President at the time bares a huge responsibility. All law is based on the Cosmic Law of the Unifield, and if a President does not have direct experience of this in their awareness then they are unfit for their primary role, which is to defend the nation. Former President Mrs Mary Mc Aleece did not do this. She failed to defend the nation, and that is why our country is under virtual constant attack in this War on Computation¹.

1. From Siúlturas - Walkabout, the first of four books of poetry I have written since 3rd August this year. Friend me on Facebook, and ask to join the closed group Dream Taighde, and you will be able to access a pre-print copy.